Your Brain on Overwhelm

When stress piles up, your brain shifts into survival mode—making it harder to focus, plan, regulate emotions, or stay motivated. This response is normal, but if left unchecked, it leads to fatigue and burnout. Breaking tasks into tiny steps and grounding your body helps reset your nervous system and restore clarity.

Benefits Corner Advocating for Care

- Advocating for your health means taking an active role in your medical care by speaking up, asking questions, and preparing for appointments to ensure your needs are met.
- Self-advocacy can feel overwhelming at first, but taking steps before, during, and after your appointment can empower you to take charge of your health and ignite change.
- Be your own best partner at the doctor's office!
- Remember: you are the expert on your body.
